EARTH DAY IS ON APRIL 22ND

Practice mindful cultivation in honor of Earth Day. Cannabis cultivators and consumers alike have many reasons to be grateful to the Earth, and the abundant harvest it provides. With drought conditions still a very real concern for Californians, it is important to think about water conservation as we enter another outdoor growing season. It is always a smart idea to develop a water catchment system. Although rain may not be expected, you never know when a seasonal downpour could provide some of the water your garden so dearly needs. Rainwater collection provides a good source of clean water that does not harm any local watersheds. Also, be careful to guard against run off of any pesticides or nutrients into any natural water source, including groundwater. Whenever possible, use only natural, organic nutrients and pest controls in your garden, both for the safety of your local ecosystem and for the purity of your finished product. Although growing with your mind on the environment may require increased attentiveness, your harvest will thank you!

CULTIVATING WISDOM™ APRIL CULTIVATING TIP

NATURAL PEST AND WEED PREVENTION

Consider soil solarization as a natural way to put a stop to weeds and pests in your cannabis garden before they even start. You can prepare your soil in the 4 to 6 weeks prior to planting by covering the soil in your planter beds with clear plastic tarps. This will draw the sun's radiant energy to your soil and heat the top foot of your soil. The intense heat generated by solarization should kill soil-borne pests and weeds. Since cannabis is best grown in direct sunlight this method can be quite effective for this type of cultivation. The more direct your sunlight on the tarp is, the more beneficial solarization is to your garden. Starting your garden off with clean soil is a great way to ensure that your finished product is also clean and free of damage from pests and pesticides.
